

1. TCP software on the sender's computer specifies how a message will be broken into packets and labeled.

2. The packets travel independently across the Internet, guided by routers using the IP protocol.

3. TCP software on the recipient's computer specifies how the packets are to be assembled once received.