Research Paper Rubric

Organization

Exceptional	Acceptable	Deficient	Unacceptable
The ideas in the paper flow meaningfully from each to the next. The introduction introduces, and body of the paper develops, and the conclusion summarizes. The paper and the abstract are independent and do not depend on each other.	Transitions between ideas are occasionally abrupt, but the paper remains intelligible. The paper and the abstract are independent.	The paper's ideas do not follow each other in a coherent way. Transitions are abrupt and unmotivated. The paper is difficult to read.	The paper's ideas appear at random, with little apparent organization. The paper's body assumes information presented in the abstract.

Title/Abstract/Conclusion

Exceptional	Acceptable	Deficient	Unacceptable
The title accurately indicates the paper's content. The abstract succinctly summarizes the paper. The conclusion briefly restates the problem and indicates how it was addressed and the results of the investigation.	The title accurately indicates the paper's content. The abstract is slightly vague but still indicates the paper's intent. The conclusion is similarly more vague than necessary but still summarizes the study.	The title is too general. The abstract is not specific and assumes information that the audience probably does not have. The conclusion fails to conclude.	The title bears little relation to the specifics of the paper. The abstract assumes information not introduced, including possibly abbreviations, and is not specific. The conclusion fails to say anything useful about the study or is missing entirely.

Originality of Expression

Exceptional	Acceptable	Deficient	Unacceptable
The paper is clearly original work, and all ideas from other sources are appropriately credited.	The same. There is no way to weaken this requirement.	Ideas and/or language appear from other sources appear in the paper without appropriate attribution and credit.	The same, and for the same reason.

Grammar, Style, and Usage

Exceptional	Acceptable	Deficient	Unacceptable
The paper commits no errors of English usage and conforms to the conventions of formal research writing.	A small number of errors of English usage do not interfere with understanding the paper's content.	The paper contains enough errors of English usage that it becomes difficult to read and understand.	The paper contains so many errors in the use of English that it is very hard to read and its meaning is not clear.

Citations and References

Exceptional	Acceptable	Deficient	Unacceptable
All sources are correctly cited according to the paper's instructions. All cited sources are listed, in the specified format, in the reference list, and every listed reference is cited in the paper's body.	Sources are cited; some inconsistencies appear in the formatting and presentation of the reference list.	A significant number of sources are not cited. The reference list omits cited references, lists references not cited, and/or follows no consistent format.	Sources are generally not cited, and the reference list contains many errors or is missing entirely.
