

1. The message is broken into small packets, each labeled for delivery.

2. The packets travel independently across the network, perhaps arriving at their destination out of order.

3. The packets are reassembled in the correct order to obtain the original message.